noticed any ill effects including iodine induced hyperthyroidism. Further the excess of iodine in the body is excreted in urine which is measured as urinary iodine excretion.

About 92 countries are implementing compulsory iodisation of salt. Iodised salt is the most effective and cost effective way to prevent and control this problem. This has been well documented by WHO and UNICEF. The iodine deficiency disorders are prevalent in the entire country and no State/UT is free from goitre and other IDD. These were the reasons that led to the Governments took decision to ban the sale of non-iodised salt for direct human consumption as a public health measure.
